

Welcome to the inner circle

The craft, the artisans, and caring for your hand-tied pieces from Jamnagar.

You're on the first-look list

Every piece we bring to Australia is hand-made by artisan families in Jamnagar, in very small numbers. Many designs are one of a kind — and when they're gone, they're gone.

Not everyday clothing

We don't sell all year round. Each collection is ordered in fixed, limited quantities and sold only on our Open Days. As a member, you're the first to know when the next one is.

— THE BANDHANI AUSTRALIA FAMILY

Every dot is a knot. Every knot is a person.

Bandhani — from the Sanskrit bandh, “to tie” — is one of India’s oldest textile crafts, practised across Gujarat and Rajasthan for centuries. Jamnagar, on Gujarat’s coast, is celebrated for Bandhani’s most vivid reds, and here the craft is passed down through families, one generation to the next.

THE HANDS BEHIND IT

Much of the tying is done by women artisans, often working from home. They pinch up a point of cloth — sometimes smaller than a grain of rice — and bind it tightly with thread.

PATIENCE, KNOT BY KNOT

A single saree or dupatta can hold thousands of these knots, and a detailed piece can take days, even weeks, to tie.

WHY IT MATTERS

When you choose hand-tied Bandhani, you’re keeping a living craft alive — and supporting the families who carry it forward.

*“The little irregularities aren't flaws.
They're the signature of a human hand.”*

How a piece comes to life

01

Marking

The design is stamped onto the fabric in washable colour.

02

Tying

Each point is pinched and bound by hand — thousands of times.

03

Dyeing

Lightest colour to darkest, with more tying between each dip.

04

Drying

Rinsed and dried with the knots still in place.

05

Opening

The threads come away — every tied point is now a dot.

06

Roll polish

Our finishing touch: we roll polish pieces to smooth the fabric and bring out its lustre.

Patterns worth knowing

Dana Bandhani

Dana means grain — tiny, closely tied dots across the fabric.

Ajrakh

Hand block-printed in Kutch with natural indigo and madder red.

Shibori

A resist-dye cousin of Bandhani — cloth is folded, stitched or bound for soft, flowing marks.

Leheriyu

From leher, wave — cloth rolled and tied to create bright diagonal ripples.

Made by hand, loved for years

Handmade textiles can last for years — even generations — with a little care.

WASHING

Dry clean the first time, or hand wash alone in cold water.

A little colour in early washes is normal for hand dyes — wash separately.

Mild detergent. No bleach, no long soaking.

Never wring — roll in a towel and press.

DRYING & IRONING

Dry in the shade, inside out — Australian sun fades colour fast.

Iron on the reverse at low heat.

For zari, gota or mirror work, press through a cotton cloth.

STORING

Fold in cotton or muslin, never plastic — let it breathe.

Refold every few months so creases don't set.

Keep embellished pieces flat and apart so they don't snag.

How to spot real hand-tied

The dots are slightly irregular with a tiny raised pucker, and the pattern shows on both sides. Printed imitations are flat, perfect and one-sided.

Found a knot still tied?

It's a sign of genuine Bandhani. Stretch the fabric gently on either side of the dot — never cut it.

What to wear, and when

11–19 OCTOBER

Navratri

Mirror-work chaniya cholis and bright Bandhani dupattas — made to move through nine nights of garba.

FESTIVAL OF LIGHTS

Diwali

Rich reds, emerald and gold. A Bandhani saree with zari detail glows beautifully by diya light.

COMING SOON · PREMIUM

Weddings — Patola

Patan Patola: double-ikat silk from Patan, Gujarat, where both warp and weft are dyed before weaving. A premium collection, styled with jewellery, is on its way.

EVERYDAY

Office & weekends

A single Bandhani or Shibori dupatta lifts a plain kurta — or even a crisp white shirt and jeans.
